Why is Rollup Chosen Over Any Other Awning System Time After Time?

FOR IT'S EXCLUSIVE FEATURES...

1 FULLY ENCLOSED TUBULAR HOUSING

Encloses your awning in the rolled in closed position. Protects the fabric and mechanisms from weather, dirt & mildew.

2 CHAINLINK WINDFLEX ARM®

Designed to flex with the wind absorbing shock and keeping constant tension on the fabric. No cables to stretch, fray or break.

3 ADJUSTABLE PITCH

A specially designed C-collar bracket allows for easy pitch adjustment up to 180 degrees.
No Poles or Supports Required.

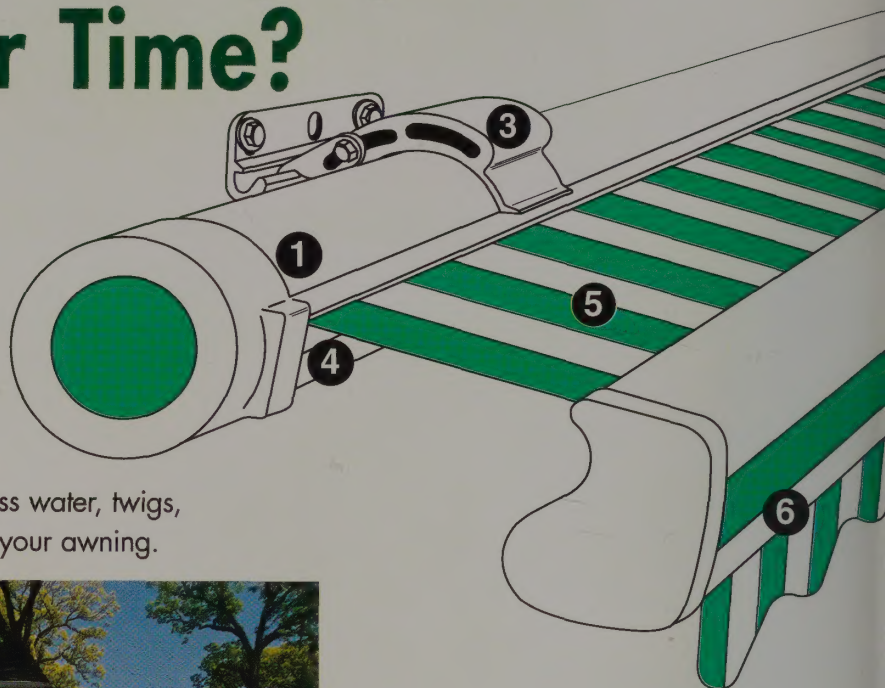

4 WIPERBAR

Automatically wipes away excess water, twigs, leaves and dirt when retracting your awning.

5 FABRIC

The largest collection of European designer fabrics.
Backed by Rollup's Industry-Setting non pro-rated 10-year Fabric Warranty.

6 FRONT BAR

Seals the housing, arm and fabric when your awning is rolled up. A color coordinated strip enhances your front bar. The decorative scallop is easily removed for off-season storage.

7 SHOWROOM

Rollup has the largest indoor and outdoor showroom on Long Island. Both create the perfect setting to help you see how a Rollup Awning would look on your home.

MARCH SALE

Bought your pillows & comforters elsewhere? Guaranteed you overpaid!!!

CAVEAT EMPTOR (BUYER BEWARE)

Don't be misled by advertisements for European goose down comforters at supposedly "SALE PRICES". We'll show you that most of those ads do not represent good values at all. Just because these advertisements are from major departments stores - do not be fooled-all down is not alike.

The quality of goose down is measured in fill power (also know as loft). Fill Power is the amount of cubic inches one ounce of down will fill. Our 800 plus Siberian Goose Down will fill between 800 and 850 cubic inches of space. "The Company Store" catalog always lists the fill power of their goose down. Bring in their catalog and we'll generally save you 50% off their prices.

Goose Down Comforters are an investment, with proper care a fine quality comforter will last a life time. Our high quality 100% cotton shells, or tickings, are divided into baffle boxes. The baffle box has a mesh channel separating the top from the bottom of the comforter. The baffle allows the down to give you maximum loft without collecting in one section of the comforter. We do not cater to the consumer that is more interested in price than quality. Our most valuable asset is our customer. We will only sell a product that we believe to be the highest value at the best price. Cheap low quality down should fill garage cans not pillows and comforters. All our goose down pillows and comforters contain 100% goose down even though it is legal to combine 70% down and 30% feathers and label the item 100% goose down. Remember feathers are those things with quills, down is similar to tiny balls of cotton, absolutely no hard quill. Our goose down comforters and pillows are machine washable because they only contain down.

The larger the individual down cluster the higher the fill power. The higher the fill power the better the comforter will insulate thus providing more comfort to you. Since you are spending 1/3 of your life in bed it should be as luxurious as possible. - Why not?

The Test

When Did Steinbeck Win The Nobel Prize? When Did Einstein Publish His Relativity Theory?

By Dan Rattiner

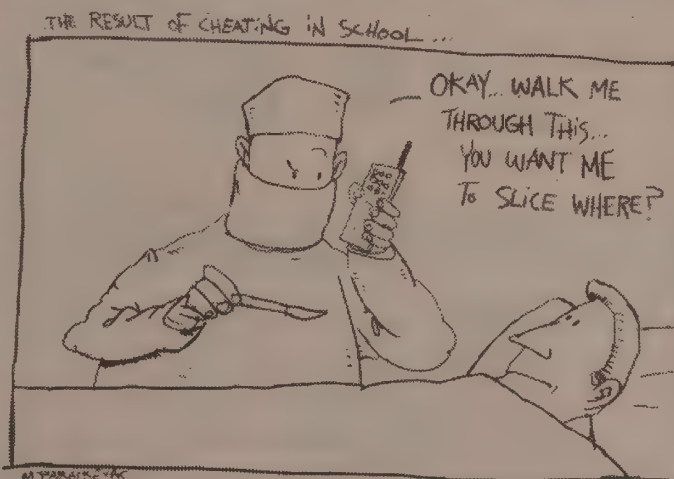

Part of going to school is memorizing dates and names. Memorize more and you get a higher grade. Memorize less and you can fail. But things have changed. Today we have the Internet. And suddenly it is no longer necessary to remember things as we used to.

First of all, however, a few facts. In 1991, restaurateur Buzzy O'Keefe converted a former theatre in Manhattan into one of the most stunning venues for private parties in New York City. It is called Laura Belle's and it is on West 43rd Street (in the theatre district, naturally) and on Wednesday night, March 6, Cathie and I were sitting at table 11 with six other people enjoying dinner. It was a fundraiser dinner for Southampton College. Honorees were Jerry and Adrienne Cohen of Shelter Island. Before the evening was out nearly half a million dollars was raised.

The highlight of the evening, however, was a contest to see which table could win an all expense paid week long trip to Anguilla. (That's an island in the Caribbean. Look it up.) And because it was such an exciting prize, every table – and the contest lasted for exactly 30 minutes while we ate our dinner – fought mightily for the prize.

Here's how it worked. We took a test. Test sheets were handed out, one to a table, with twenty test questions each. The people at the tables would work as a group and would have thirty minutes to come up with the answers. Then, the tables with the two highest scores would be announced. And the members of these tables would come onstage where in a setting not unlike that in Jeopardy, answer further questions, without the use of cell phones. The table answering the most of these questions correctly would win the vacation in Anguilla.

I say without cell phones for a reason. Consider some of the questions asked in the preliminary questionnaire.

"David Steinberg was named President of Long Island University in 1985. What film won the Best Picture Award at the Academy Awards in 1985?"

"Southampton College is home to the John Steinbeck Writer's Room and each year presents the John Steinbeck Award for Excellence in Writing at their Meet the Writers book fair. (A). In what year did John Steinbeck win the Pulitzer Prize for The Grapes of Wrath? (B). What year did he win the Nobel Prize for Literature?"

All around the room, at every table, the cell phones came out. Back at all the participants' apartments in the city or houses in the Hamptons, there were children sitting in front of computers, talking to their friends on AOL, shooting down aliens, making websites or desperately downloading songs from Napster. (This was among Napster's final weeks of free downloads.)

"Hello? Jennifer? I am in a competition. I can't explain. But I need your help. What was the highest the Dow Jones got to in December 1993?"

1993 was the year Bob Silberman was named Chancellor of Southampton College.

This question was being asked over the cell phone by Adrienne Cohen, who was sitting next to me at Table 11. Her daughter Jennifer is nine. They had a baby sitter but Jennifer took the call.

The elusive Ralph Lauren lent a hand (well, the written word from his hand) to a new book entitled Form and Fashion by author Sheila Metzner. The text accompanies the ethereal "painterly" fashion shots. We think this book will be on the coffee tables out here this summer.

Sultry Kim Cattrall (she and hubby Mark Levinson have a home out here) of Sex in the City had dinner with Alec Baldwin in New York's Tribeca. Friends sat around having a tea and sympathy for Alec. We wonder?

Hot off the runways, must have for the season: Calvin Klein's black satin peacoat suit, Donna Karan's military coat, Ralph Lauren's riding suit.

Betsey Johnson's new designer duds are so beautiful and totally her in that wonderful, as she says "Wacky" color palette that even designer Steven Tyler was on the sideline of the cat walk shopping away with a disposable camera.

Is it just us, but now that Pollock (Ed Harris) is up and in the running for an Oscar his photo is everywhere! We particularly love the photo of him in Vanity Fair's "Legends of Hollywood." Herb Ritts, photographer (often seen out here during the hot summer), has a bevy of incredible Hollywood shots in that issue. Annie Leibowitz, another Hampton's drop-by and fabulous photographer, works in some Hampton celebs in her elaborate photo album of the same issue: Steven Spielberg, Julian Schnabel, Mike Nichols

• When I first went to see you about having my eyes done, I told you my greatest desire was to be able to enjoy theatre again by seeing the faces of people on stage. This week I have been to two events, less than two weeks after my surgery, and that wish has been granted.....

Robert Barandes

Attorney at Law

• I must admit that I was somewhat apprehensive about the final outcome of the surgery, I am very glad I had it done. Now I realize with great happiness that this was the right choice for me. The old fear of losing my eyesight or having complications because of it, seem very laughable now.

As a patient and psychologist I want you to know that your professionalism, reassurance and caring before, during and after the surgery are greatly appreciated. Besides being a physician you are a true gentleman. You can be sure that I will recommend you enthusiastically to anyone who talks to me about LASIK surgery.

• Even though many of my patients and friends have undergone LASIK, all with excellent results, I was apprehensive. But Dr. Ricci and his staff were so professional and gentle I was reassured. Test (Continued from page 11)

As for me, I called our home in East Hampton where Cathie's son, Marak Squires, answered. Marak is a senior at East Hampton High School.

"When did Albert Einstein publish his Theory of Relativity?" I asked Marak. "Also, when did he win the Nobel Prize in Physics?"

Roger Rosenblatt, our m.c. and the Parsons University Professor of Writing at Southampton College, wrote "Man of the Century," a celebrated profile of Albert Einstein for Time magazine. Thus the Einstein questions.

There were at least nine questions we could not answer at the table that would require looking up. We divided them up among the cell phone users. We parents were asking our children for the answers. Which they would get by typing in key words under SEARCH in Yahoo or Alta Vista and then chase them down from there.

Here were some of the questions that Marak was able to answer for me, even though he was also under a time constraint because he had to go to tennis practice at the East Hampton Indoor Tennis Club. He told us what was best picture at the academy awards in 1985. He told us how you would say "Where is the Bathroom" in Chinese. He gave us the answers we needed to the questions about John Steinbeck and Albert Einstein.

(The nine year old, without looking on the Internet, told us who was Harry Potter's cousin. Also, the top level of the Dow in December 1993, which I think she DID have to look up on the Internet.)

Was this legal? Well, the cell phones were out at every table. Neither Rosenblatt nor Chancellor Bob Sillerman was admonishing us for breaking the rules. In fact, had there been rules about cell phones, I thought, they would have been printed at the top of the questionnaire. And they weren't. Sillerman and Rosenblatt did not have a case.

I remembered back to a test I once took in college. It was a chemistry test. I was terrible at chemistry. I had tried, and failed, to learn the Periodic Table of Elements, a long list of gasses and minerals and so forth that comprised every single thing in the Universe. In the absence of having learned this, I walked down the hall toward the classroom loudly chanting the periodic table over and over, then as I entered the classroom, to myself, silently. I sat down, took out a pencil, and still chanting, proceeded to write this table down on a piece of paper. Illegal? Not technically. I got an A on that test.

In the end, I suppose, it came down to which table had more children willing to go on the Internet on short notice. This turned out to be Table 17 and Table 11. Table 11! We took our places on stage, and, in hand to hand combat, went at it with Table 17 to see who would be going to Anguilla. We wound up in a tie. And so there was a tie-breaker question.

The tie-breaker, believe it or not, had nothing to do with Pulitzer Prizes, the Academy Awards or Southampton College. It did, however, have to do with the Caribbean, and it was something that one of our kids could have gotten the answer to if we had been allowed to contact them on our cell phones. All they had to do was search under Brandi. The question was, what company makes Brandi's brassieres. Table 17 knew it. We didn't. Nike.

And that was that.

Thus does intelligence get measured in America in the Twenty-First century. •

I Think It Would Be Fun To Run A Newspaper – Charles Foster Kane

By Dan Rattiner

Every once in a while somebody asks me what it must be like to run a weekly newspaper in a small town. Well, I'll tell you. Though maybe it would be better if you just followed me around for a day. Today for instance.

At eight a.m., I was sitting at the desk in my study preparing to call WRCN, a radio station in Riverhead. They had called several weeks earlier to ask if I could call in for their morning show on Fridays. I could tell them what would be upcoming in Dan's Papers.

I cleared my throat, and I thought about two of the most remarkable events of the week that were about to be in the paper. One was a just announced residential subdivision, one hundred acres of farmland in Sagaponack, now planted in potatoes, which would be divided up into 34 housing sites, each site with a house on it designed by a different famous architect. Prices for the homes would be in the one to two million dollar range. A lot of potatoes. The other story involved a plan by the Village of Sag Harbor Board to punish itself if any member of the board were to talk in public about what went on behind closed doors in executive session. Could mean fifteen days in jail for whichever of them did it.

I opened my diary, got the number for the radio station, and dialed.

"Regular business hours for WRCN are between nine and five Monday and Friday. If you know your party's extension dial it now. If you want an employee's voice mail, dial the first three letters of his last name now. Otherwise dial 0 for the operator."

Who had called me was Caz, the program director. I dialed C A Z.

"If you would like the company's general mail box, leave your message after the beep. BEEP." CHAZ PICK UP THE PHONE!

I could hear him bantering away in the background. You know how they do that at radio

At work, I attended an editorial meeting. Five of us sat around and discussed the news of the day. There was a plan afoot in Southampton to pass a law making it possible for a person to propose his neighbor's house as a historic site. You didn't need approval of the owner of the house to do this. Naming his house a historic site would put lots of restrictions on future building plans for your neighbor.

"Turn that radio down," Executive Editor Jerry Cimisi said, "or I'll make you a historic site."

Yes indeed.

In The East Hampton Star was what I thought a very imaginative article. We've just had a big snowstorm with high waves in the ocean and very high tides, almost flood conditions. A reporter had interviewed several fishermen and environmentalists, asking them whether they thought the fish liked storms.

"A storm usually muddies the water," said Dave Krusa, a longtime tilefish fisherman. "They get mentally disturbed."

"If you get a real good sea," said Capt. Bill Urvalek, "the fish get pushed around and so they get real docile and lay around on the bottom until the water clears."

Personally, I have often watched schools of fish being sucked out of Sagaponack Pond when it overflowed across the beach and into the ocean. They flop around and seem very surprised by the experience.

"How do I make something to eat out of this?" I asked over the intercom. "Is there any cream cheese?"

stations, letting you hear the station while you're on hold.

Chaz did not pick up the phone. I pressed OPERATOR.

"No attendant is available at this time. Good bye," the machine said, and hung up.

Wait a minute. I typed CAZ? It is CHAZ.

I tried again. Same result. I tried it still again, but no matter what I tried I could not break through the sleeping phone system. I felt like someone in a soundproof room, unable to make the person I saw just outside the double thick window hear me as I yelled and banged on the walls.

I gave up and drove to work.

Whoa! Oh my goodness! Land 'o Goshen!

"I wonder if there are fireman rescue fish," I opined. "You know, EVERYBODY DOWN ON YOUR BELLIES, STAY UNDER THE SMOKE, FOLLOW ME, HUG THE ROCKS."

I also thought there might be fish that were happy during a storm. With the tides higher, they have that much more room to swim around, zipping this way and that. Maybe some of them would think they're going to take over the world.

I went upstairs to my office and listened to my voice mail. The first call was from a Susan Horn who worked for a public relations firm. She wanted to bring to my attention the groundbreaking in Yaphank, New York for a brand new Wally Amos Muffin Bakery. It would be at 11 a.m. tomorrow. She hoped I'd be there.

I thought, well, it is March 9, still winter. The calls about Billy Joel and Christie Brinkley events just are not happening now.

Call number two was a voice mail from David Silver who wanted to know when the annual Artist-Writers Game in East Hampton would be played this year. He said he might be able to get somebody very special to come. "His first name is Yogi," he said. Could the last name be Berra? I called him back. Left a message on his voice mail. Told him to call Leif Hope and left him Leif's number.

Third call came from Sid Sher at Newsday. I had called him the day before because a teenage friend of mine had found a flaw in the Newsday Stock Picking Competition software and he personally had turned a $6,000 stake of play money into $68,000 in play money in just three days and was in first place in the competition and thought Newsday ought to know about it. I called Sid back and gave him the kid's name and phone number.

"He's usually at home on the computer after 3 p.m.," I said to Sher's voice mail.

Next call was from a guy named Alex who asked if I remembered him from when he was promoting the Waldbaum Balloon Fest in Brookhaven, had arranged for me to get a balloon ride, and he now wanted to strongly urge me to attend the Uncle Wally Muffin Bakery Ground Breaking in Yaphank and hoped he'd see me there.

Held a meeting in my office about the upcoming centerpiece glossy color magazine for Dan's Papers that we are pitching ads for. Three ad sales already this morning. I've ordered a mock up. It's called SouthOfTheHighway. I want to do a piece called WHERE THE BODIES ARE BURIED. About which cemeteries dead celebrities are buried in.

Received a phone call from a Columbia journalism student who is doing a story on the artist Michael Perez for a term paper. She intends to pitch it to New York Magazine. She noticed that we had used his work on the cover of Dan's Papers. Why did we do that?

"We liked his painting," I said.

"Thanks," she said. "That's great!"

Ate lunch at my desk. A California Roll from the Yam-a-Q Restaurant down the street and some hot green tea.

Somebody from the production room downstairs came up with a cold, plain bagel, three slices of lox and a white plastic knife.

"How do I make something to eat out of this?" I asked over the intercom. "Is there any cream

Shields Up

An American Made Anti-Missile Shield Could Protect Everyone On The Planet From...

By Dan Rattiner

President Bush made his first foray into international affairs last week when he announced plans to resume development of an anti-missile shield. An enemy fires some missiles, the shields go up, and the missiles bounce off and land harmlessly into the sea. That's the theory anyway.

Objections to the anti-missile shield plan have come from just about every world leader who has thought about it, including allies such as Canada, New Zealand and France. President Clinton, who fielded these objections while he was in office, put the shield plan on hold. These other countries were suggesting an anti-missile shield would just touch off a costly arms race. After all, if one side puts up a shield strong enough to fend off arrows, history has shown that the other side simply builds stronger arrows. And so it goes, with valuable resources being taken away from health, education and anti-poverty budgets and spent instead on building bigger shields and arrows. President Clinton said he would like to think about it.

It has not been lost on anybody that the anti-missile proposal during the Clinton administration was nothing more than a warmed over reworking of the glitzy old Starwars program, named after the glitzy movie of the same name, and put into development by President Ronald Reagan during the 1980s. There was, by some stretch of the imagination, a real need for a working anti-missile system during that era because Americans were very concerned that we might be taken over and buried by the old Soviet Union. We spent several hundred billion dollars on the development of the

Mr. Bush Jr. has apparently thought all this through and has decided that with the Cold War over and peace at hand, how could there be a better time for an Anti-Missile shield? We lack an enemy so there can be no embarrassments. And to satisfy our allies, the shield will be put up everywhere. There will not be a country in the world that will not be protected by the upcoming Made in America Anti-Missile Shield. At first I thought, well, he must mean that if a country is an ally of ours they get the shield, and so to get the shield they have to sign a paper that if they decide to become an enemy they have to give it back. Or give up the code to activate it. Or something.

There will not be a country in the world that will not be protected by the upcoming Made in America Anti-Missile Shield.

But when I realized how stupid this sounded, I thought

Starwars system during that era — we really had it underway — but unfortunately when tests were run the shield could not even shoot down slow moving out of date American missiles sent up for the purpose of being shot down. It was such an embarrassment. We'd get ready to fire a missile, the missile firing scientists would talk to the shield activating scientists and tell them exactly where the missiles would go, and then the shields would go up in all the wrong places. Starwars went back to the drawing board.

about it again and came to the conclusion that who Mr. Bush Jr. really wants to protect us from is aliens. Not the kind that sneak over the border. The kind that invades from outer space.

An alien warship is spotted entering the solar system. Our shields go up. Sounds good to me.

On the other hand, since the shields don't work and the aliens, by traveling safely through light-years, are demonstrating a technology that is clearly light-years ahead of ours, I'm not so sure its such a good idea to piss them off. • cheese?"

"No. But we'll send you up a nail clipper," came the reply. This is gross, I thought.

I got a phone call from a man who said he was writing a story about THE MONTAUK PROJECT for a men's magazine called Gear. At first I thought he said Deer or Dear and thought that was a real weird name for a men's magazine but, hey, okay. I mean, I had a nail clipper on its way up.

THE MONTAUK PROJECT was a book about a Navy destroyer, parked in Philadelphia, which during experiments done by the government, got tele-transported to an Army base in Montauk in 1952. Completely the figment of someone's imagination in my opinion. And it had gone wrong. The crew had died, and the Army and Navy had covered it up, which was now being revealed by the authors of THE MONTAUK PROJECT.

After reading this book — I look at everything about our community because it's my job as an editor — I called the author of this book and ventured the opinion that what he had written was a complete crock. He had said there was a time, in the mid 1960s, when all the livestock and animals in Montauk had congregated in the center of town and it was a totally baffling and unexplainable phenomenon. Didn't happen, I told the author. I was there, running my newspaper. I'd have known about it.

"You know you are in volume two," the reporter from Gear said. "They quote you. They say you have covered it all up about the animals because you have been brainwashed by the Army."

"I didn't know there was a volume two," I said.

"Look, I know this never happened. It's obviously all made up and I am wondering what makes people believe this sort of thing? Anyway, what is not made up and is most certainly true, and I know because I have interviewed them, is that the author of this book, in doing research, has de-sexed some young boys in Sag Harbor. You know about this, right? It's a fact."

"Never heard of it," I said. "News to me."

Better watch out, I thought.

The afternoon was taken up with some ad sales calls, calls to one of our printers, a call home to say I was having this very busy day and would be home late and don't worry about me for dinner, and discussions with the bookkeeping, classified and production departments about various problems.

Late in the day, in a jolly mood, I decided to leave work and drive down to the beach and write for awhile. Before I left, however, I read a police report which said that in Sag Harbor a shoplifter had hit up the Seven Eleven, making off with a can of beer, a banana and an ice tea. He had left the cash register alone. Ought to introduce them to the people who wrote THE MONTAUK PROJECT is what I thought.

A call came through from Chaz or Caz at WRCN. He had gotten the hysterical message I had left at 8 a.m. on the general office mailbox. But why hadn't I called on the special line?

"You never gave me the special line number," I said.

"Yes I did."

"No, you didn't. Well, its water under the dam. What is it?" I flipped open the pages of my diary to next Friday where I had already written to call again. I wrote the special line number down, right below another special line number that was exactly identical.

"You DID give me the special line number," I said. "I apologize. I wrote it in the wrong Friday."

"Well call me then," he said, a trace of coldness in his voice, "and we'll try it again."

I put on my coat. Saw a copy of the Landpaper on a table, and flipped through it. There was a correction.

"There was a typographical error in the last Landpaper," it read. "The date of the Dongen patent should have been printed as 1686. My apologies to the readers for any confusion."

I went downstairs to the front door. There were still a few employees lurking about.

"Anyone hear any crying and shouting out on the highway?" I asked.

People shook their heads. "Why?" someone asked.

"The Dongen Patent was in 1686," I said. And then I was gone.

* * *

I am down at Main Beach in East Hampton now, sitting in my car, writing this article. The tide is high, the waves rough, the fish zipping happily this way and that, and a full moon rising. It made magnificent silver ripples on the surface of the sea.

Whatever Became Of The Paintings Jackson Pollock Gave Peggy Guggenheim?

By Dan Rattiner

Our illustrious editor was in Venice in early February and filed this report which has finally arrived.

Did you ever wonder what became of the fine art collected by the dealer Peggy Guggenheim? Peggy had a Manhattan art gallery for thirty years, and among many of her successes was the arrangement she made with painter Jackson Pollock. She would finance Pollock's living expenses for two years — he and his wife would move from Manhattan to East Hampton — and in exchange, Pollock would give Peggy every painting he made during that time. She in turn would sell these paintings in her gallery. And those she could not sell she would keep. That was the deal.

And so, in the end of 1945, there came to a studio on Springs-Fireplace Road, the man who was to become the greatest painter of his era — and the founder of the drip painting school of abstract expressionism.

So what happened to Peggy's art collection? Peggy kept her Manhattan art gallery going until 1947. And then she retired to Venice. We recently visited Venice, and we saw this vast collection of paintings that really belong in America but are in this remarkable city in Italy. We saw Motherwells and Rothkos and Pollocks. They are in her home, but which, through an arrangement with the trust fund of her father Solomon Guggenheim, are administered from Manhattan at what is now — Peggy passed away in 1979 — the Peggy Guggenheim Collection at the Solomon R Guggenheim Foundation.

"I knew Peggy," the owner of an art gallery on the Rue Frezzeria told us. "She would wake at five in the morning, and have her private gondolier take her to a cafe by the Piazza San Marco for a few hours. There she'd read the newspapers. Then he'd take her across the Grand Canal back home where she'd spend the rest of the day."

He told us it was a good thing she arranged for her collection to be administered from Manhattan. "If it had been left to the city fathers of Venice," he said, smiling, "it would have all been sold off within a week. She knew the Venetians." And he knew as he was one.

I am going to try, in the next few paragraphs, to construct just what Venice is, in a way that you could really appreciate what is going on here.

Jackson Pollock in his studio

Pictures cannot do this place justice. They don't capture it. They say see Venice before you die. There is a reason for it.

Venice is an island, about three miles across and two miles wide, that sits in the Adriatic Sea about eight miles from the mainland of Italy. It is flat and was originally created from the silt and mud that came down a river that emptied here into the Adriatic. I mentioned earlier that this gallery I visited was on a certain street. But that is not actually true. From end to end, the island is built up wall to wall with these ancient antique buildings — the last of them was built about 1800 — and there are cobblestone walkways and squares and palazzos and so forth, but the truth is there is not a car or truck on the island. It is like Fire Island. You park your car on the mainland. And how you get around on this little island that at one time teemed with almost a quarter million people, is by boat. The entire island is laced with canals. There are hundreds of them, and there are more than 400 stone bridges that cross over them for the people on the walkways, but the transportation system is a series of waterbusses, barges, motorboats, sailboats and gondolas that service the various shops and businesses from behind. You walk along on the cobblestone walkways. The merchandise comes in the back from the boats. And at various points, about thirty of them, there are docks and glass enclosed water bus shelters where the water busses stop and pick you up. and where, if you want, you can look at a map of the island's metro system — these water busses — in the same way you would look at a subway map in New York.

Now we know why Peggy Guggenheim came to Venice. It is a city filled with antique architecture crammed in about as tight as Greenwich Village. But out on the canals there is this melee of watercraft, masons with their bricks and cement in open motorboats, farmers with their bags of fruit, Japanese tourists in gondolas with their Nikons, and the water taxis filled with people going this way and that, sitting in chairs in the back reading Il Gazzettino to find out the news of the day, or standing in the bow trying to figure out how the pilot is going to miss the cabin cruiser coming right for him. Ever see a motorboat with lights flashing, siren sounding and men in uniform standing by as they zip along at about 30 knots? That would be the police.

Cathie and I chose as our headquarters for our visit the highly recommended Luna Hotel Baglioni, listed in our guidebook as a four star affair with antiques in every room, impeccable service and the excellent Canova Restaurant. It is right adjacent to St. Marks Square though on a side street, so it is a hundred feet from the busiest place imaginable but is nevertheless quiet. Also it is the oldest hotel in Venice.

Let me tell you how old. There is a record of the Templar Knights staying in this building in 1114 getting ready for the Second Crusade. On the other hand, it was most recently renovated in 1996. And you can imagine the marble floors, brass fittings and velvet curtains being brought in on workmen's barges. In fact, the renovation took four years. Now the hotel looks like the Plaza on Fifth Avenue.

The history of Venice is fascinating. It might have developed, in fact it is amazing that it didn't develop, just as a small port town on one side of this big island. Imagine a quarter of a million people on Shelter Island. Or on Roosevelt Island in the East River. Well, that was when Venice was at its peak around 1500. Venice, as a City State, ruled the Mediterranean. But it went into decline after that. Now just about 50,000 people live here. The salad days are over. Three quarters of the population have departed, leaving this stunning city behind, an old antique, now visited by a staggering eleven million tourists every year.

Venice began life as a small town by the sea in ancient times. The Romans took it over. And when the Roman empire fizzled out around 500 AD, the town asked to be taken in under the protection of Byzantium, the Holy Roman Empire. Two hundred years went by and though there were barbarians at the gates of most of the rest of what was to become Italy, none threatened Venice. Not enough of them could get across the water to take it.

The Venice Town Council — a City Council by this time — met frequently and decided on matters for their City State. Venice grew as a city of boatbuilders and seafarers. And there was a church on the island to their patron saint, St. Theodore. They pretty much controlled all sea transportation on the Mediterranean. And they got very rich.

In 828, something very important happened for Venice. Some Venetian adventurers broke into a building in Egypt and stole the bones of the Apostle Mark and brought them back home. With this, the City fathers decided to abandon St. Theodore as their patron saint and replace him with St. Mark. In fact, they made a giant marble sarcophagus for these remains and they began the construction of a huge church to his honor — the St. Marks Church — that stands in the plaza today. They also announced that every Venetian piloting a ship leaving Venice should return with some statue or column or painting or other icon to decorate this church, an announcement that was carried out for the next thousand years, which accounts for the extraordinary hodge podge of antique architecture that is this magnificent church — everything from Roman to Greek to Byzantine to Gothic to Oriental architecture not only in and on the church but just about everywhere else on the island. The island thrived. And the city fathers created the Venetian motto, which can be found on many an old Venetian flag: We are Venetians first, and then, only, Christians.

The City fathers created a special religious leader to deal with Rome. He was called the Doge, he carried a scepter and wore robes and a special hat that looked like an upside down boot. There were special rules that the City fathers created for him. He could not make rules, he could not lead armies, he could not entertain visiting rulers, he could not receive gifts from visiting rulers other than flowers and spices and other consumables, he could not hold a regular job other than being Doge and though he would be elected for life by the City fathers, he could not hand down his office to his sons. When he died, they would elect a new Doge. And automatically there would be an investigation of the old Doge's financial affairs. If he was found to be corrupt, his debts would be borne by his family. In other words, the City fathers, elected by the rich of the island, ran the place with no interference and no foreign entanglements.

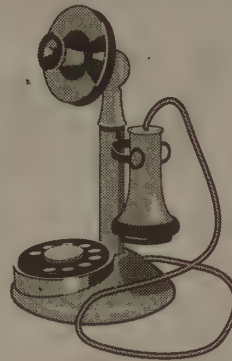

One particular Doge, a man in his nineties, accomplished an extraordinary thing in Christendom at the start of the Third Crusade. All of Europe had sent knights to Venice — there were 30,000 of them — to be transported to the holy land. (Some stayed at our hotel.) Venice was happy to have them and to charge them for their lodging and passage. But the Doge got up and spoke to them in Plaza San Marco and persuaded them not to invade the

The Saint As Slave, The Revolutionary War And The Parade In Montauk and Moscow

By Jerry Cimisi

St. Patrick's Day is celebrated from New York to Boston (and San Diego, Savannah and Chicago) to Dublin and now, yes, Moscow. In New York this year's parade starts on Saturday, March 17. The parade draws hundreds of thousands of spectators, many of whom will head east a week later, for Long Island's biggest St. Patrick's Day Parade: in Montauk on Sunday, March 25.

Along with the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade, the St. Patrick's Day Parade is one of New York City's ultimate events (I suppose you could add New Year's Eve in Times Square). But the parade honoring the saint who brought the Church to Ireland is an institution much more venerable than any other existing event in New York.

In the latter part of the 1700s, George Washington said he very much enjoyed the parade the Irish of New York held on St. Patrick's Day. In fact, parades/marches of this sort predated the Revolutionary War. The first St. Pat's Parade was in the 1760s. Soldiers of Irish in the service of the King marched from their parish churches to St. Patrick's Cathedral. Even before this, the Irish were already marching in Boston. The very first St. Patrick's Day Parade was held in 1737, sponsored by the Charitable Irish Society of Boston.

It should be noted that the St. Patrick's Day parade originated in America. It is now a major happening in Ireland, but it was those who left Ireland who made St. Patrick's Day such a worldwide celebration

But before we delve further into the past – and present – of the parade, it would be pertinent to ask: just who was this man now called St. Patrick?

Perhaps it was appropriate, like the immigrants who transformed America, that Patrick was a man who came to Ireland from elsewhere and changed that country forever. It is not known precisely where – or exactly when – he was born. Some legends say Scotland, other England, Wales or even France. The general consensus is that he came from Britain, which would be no little irony, considering the long standing animus between Ireland and England. Patrick's birth year was traditionally ascribed to 372. Contemporary historians place it in the first quarter of the 400s. Patrick left his own writings which did not clear up the matter of natal country and year of birth, but he did state that his father had been a deacon and the son of a priest. (In the first millennium of Christianity, priests married and had families.)

The following may be true or not or somewhere in between. Patrick's life quickly becomes adventuresome. At sixteen he is captured by pirates and sold into slavery in Ireland. He served some unknown master as a swineherd in the county of Antrim. During this servitude Patrick has dreams and visions. In one vision he is told there is a ship that will take him to freedom. He escaped, trekked some 200 miles to the coast, where a ship's captain, reluctant at first, eventually took him away from Ireland.

He is brought to England, where he enters the church. He is a deacon, then a priest, finally a bishop. He was not highly regarded by all of his colleagues. The Penguin Dictionary of Saints relates that his peers "accused him of being an ignoramus." They were possibly prejudiced due to his years as a slave.

At any rate, the Church, specifically the pope, had a job for Patrick: to go back to Ireland and make that pagan land Christian. There were in fact Christians in Ireland before Patrick, but they were a small minority; the dominant religion was Druidism. And there was a bishop in Ireland prior to Patrick, Palladius Patricus. There are scholars who believe that St. Patrick is a blending between this first bishop and Patrick who came from Britain.

As Patrick was trying to change things as they were, he had a hard go of it in Ireland. Legend has it that he was so exasperated with the Druids he cursed their fertile country, turning it into a desolation of bogs and rivers with no fish. He cursed their cookingware, so no pot would ever boil. And he cursed the Druids themselves, so the earth swallowed them up.

Be that as it may, the saint (who apparently didn't have the patience of one) is known more as the man who drove the snakes out of Ireland. Biologists, or whomever are supposed to know about such things, say there were no snakes in Ireland in the first place. That may be so. Patrick was supposed to have accomplished this mass expulsion by beating on a loud drum – with such vigor, it seems, he smashed a hole in it. Said hole was immediately repaired by an angel.

Patrick's cacophonous expulsion was said to create a state of affairs in which any reptile would die who touched the soil of Ireland. Hundreds of years later, in 1831, an Irishman decided to test this old legend. James Cleland brought a half dozen snakes from London's Covent Garden; he set them loose in his garden in the county of Down.

A week later one was reported killed about three miles away. The man who had slain the poor creature thought it some kind of eel, took it to a naturalist, Dr. J.L. Drummond, who easily pronounced the reptile's true identity. There was a great deal of shock, even apocalyptic misgiving, that a "rale living sarpint" had not only appeared in Ireland but had been slain not all that far from the burial place of St. Patrick himself.

Sermons were preached that the end of the world was near. Some person or persons perhaps more practical (and suspicious) put out a reward for the finding/killing of other snakes. In short order three more snakes were killed. The two remaining were never (fortunately for them) accounted for.

Information about this odd incident is gathered from The Book of Days, a 19th century work by R. Chambers, who was in fact a witness to this. He recalled that when the full nature of the origin of the snakes came out, there was a good deal "of bitter feelings and angry indignation" at the person who had brought this all about. Cleland must have been thankful his role in this was not known at the time.

Patrick founded two churches, both named Kirkpatrick ("kirk" – yes, as in Captain Kirk – means church), one on the Isle of Man. He is said to have originated a favorite beverage of the time, poteen, though most scholars dispute this. History says the saint, unlike his countrymen, was not inclined to drink. In fact, he forbid his followers from drinking during the daytime, an injunction one devout acolyte took so much to heart that he would not even drink water during the day.

The shamrock, of course, is associated with St. Patrick. The seamrog, or trefoil plant, has become the symbol of St. Patrick's Day. It is said Patrick used its three leaves as an illustration of the Trinity. It is probably not coincidental that in Arabic the plant is called shamrakh, and was considered sacred in Persia (now Iran) as the emblem for the Persian triads of gods.

It is interesting to note Pliny wrote that the trefoil plant can cure snake bites. If there had been snakes in Ireland some time in the very distant past, the plant might have been revered as an antidote against serpents.

And a four leaf clover might be considered lucky because it resembles an ancient apotropaic (something that wards off evil) cross enclosed in a circle: the Celtic sunwheel.

Patrick died on March 17, 492. Had he been born in 372, he certainly would have been very old. Incidentally, in medieval England, it was believed that on March 17 Noah had entered the ark. There is a further connection that Patrick, the converter of Druids, might have wryly appreciated. Noah was said to have left the ark on April 29, the day before May's Eve or Beltane, a special observance by the Druids in honor of Belitis, during which some unlucky soul was burned alive.

Current St. Patrick's Day celebrations are certainly the opposite of such horrid events, but festivities to honor the saint have not been without their unpleasant controversies. In New York, for the past decade or so, there is the running battle each year as to whether gays and lesbians can march in the parade. The organizers of the parade have forbidden this. Though in the annual Queens parade, which has already been held this year, gays have been welcomed.

Early in the 1990s there was a period of three years during which a Massachusetts law said that there could be no parades or festivities in the state that excluded homosexuals from participating. But in a unanimous Supreme Court decision in 1995, the Court affirmed that it would be a violation of the free speech of the parade organizers. Ruling that parades are protected under the First Amendment, Justice Souter, writing for the court, said, "...disapproval of a private speaker's statement does

Well Here It Is March 5 And Thank Goodness That Big Winter Blizzard Passed Us By

By Dan Rattiner

I think we've all been seeing too many monster movies. Too many movies where supposedly dormant volcanos explode and wipe out a ski resort, too many movies where two hundred foot waves knock over the World Trade Center, too many movies where Godzillas storm ashore, meteors land just south of Tucson, Arizona and earthquakes swallow up Los Angeles.

There is no other way to explain it. A good snow storm, where I come from which is right here, is two feet of snow. Cars get buried up to their fenders, the power goes out here and there for a few hours, some men get heart attacks shoveling snow. The next day we take the kids sleigh riding.

Now, however, we have The Weather Channel. The segue into Your Local Forecast shows images of tornadoes, floods and mud slides, and then, My God! Snow!

"A brutal snowstorm is going to strike the Northeast tomorrow afternoon," an announcer intones in a monotone that for someone else would be reserved for an announcement of the end of the earth. "Details? In a moment."

He rattles some papers, we cut to a commercial and everybody in the house starts running around like chickens with their heads cut off. Lists of emergency supplies are being drawn up. Someone questions whether there is time to put the plywood up over the windows. Don't forget to go to the gas station and top off your car. We could be stranded for days.

The details? After more photos of tornadoes, floods and mudslides, a man stands in front of a giant map of the Northeast, upon which, over and over, the radar shot of the cloud cover moves rapidly from west to east (as it almost always does since the earth spins East to West). It is incredibly accurate. Here on the east end, a single cloud is shown to have just passed over. We look out the window. The sun is shining. But there it is, scuttling off in the direction of Nantucket.

The weatherman has a pointer. "Blizzard con-

I was down at the North Main Street IGA fighting for candles with everybody else in town. I got paper plates and dishes. Huge containers of drinking water. Matches. Batteries. Toilet paper. Chunky peanut butter. Chunky peanut butter? This is a disaster food? I call home on the cell.

"We happen to be out of peanut butter," Cathie says. "You got a problem with that?"

It wasn't so long ago, in the bad old days, that you'd read in the paper or hear a newscaster on TV tell you that a snowstorm was coming. It was no big deal. He'd rattle his papers, and then turn the microphone over to the guy doing sports. A foot of snow? A foot and a half? Good sleigh riding weather. Get out those shovels.

The problem, I think, is that a snowstorm or a northeaster or some ice and sleet is, these days, considered entertainment. The Invasion of the Ice Monster. Yaaaaaah!

It's true that weather forecasting has come a long way since the Blizzard of 1888, to which all other winter storms are compared. Now that was a storm. And very few people knew it was coming. Four feet of snow in 72 hours. Hundreds of people dead.

The storm which seems to have turned weather into entertainment was most surely the Hurricane of 1938. September, but still summer weather. Lots of big summer homes out on the beach. Many of their servants. A few of the rich folk dallying before returning back to the City. (What drama! What social commentary!)

The storm which seems to have turned weather into entertainment was most surely the Hurricane of 1938.

ditions are likely to hammer much of the northeast tonight and tomorrow as a powerful winter snow storm dallies just south of New England. By midnight, the storm will strengthen, but instead of wandering out to sea, will remain in one spot awaiting the arrival of a vigorous upper-air disturbance plunging southeastward from the Great Lakes. The result will be a foot of snow. Maybe more. Put your head between your knees and kiss your butt good-bye."

Everyone in the house is hysterical. This is like the Hurricane of '38. The Blizzard of '64. Two fronts coming together. And there will surely soon be a third. Just wait. It's like that movie, The Perfect Storm.

This was on Saturday night. Sunday morning,

It was not that the weather bureau, primitive as it was at the time, was not tracking the storm. People had called in. It had grazed Miami. It was offshore of Georgia. It was just that it suddenly began to move so fast that the weather bureau lost track of it. No storm, before or since, moved with such speed up the Atlantic coast. When they were still waiting for it to appear off the Outer Banks of North Carolina, it was slamming into the barrier dune at Westhampton Beach at about sixty miles an hour. A tidal wave, churned up by the speed of the storm, roared through. The houses exploded on the dunes. Downtown Westhampton Beach was inundated. And the papers from Village Hall fluttered down over a forest in northern New Hampshire ten hours later.

Now THAT was a storm. What a great movie or documentary that would make. (It has.)

Anyway, here it is Monday afternoon, five p.m., high tide when there is supposed to be ten inches of snow already and FLOOD CONDITIONS as the banner that ran along the bottom of the Weather Channel this morning so frighteningly declared, and as near as I can see, the tide is up about a foot. As for the snow, there hasn't been any. There's been rain. And that's it.

What we did have, briefly, around two this afternoon, were some brief gusts of wind that blew the branches of the trees this way and that for awhile. Earlier this morning, driving to work, the announcers were warning us there might be fifty five or sixty five mile an hour winds, gale conditions caused by the mixing up of the blizzard stalled off shore and that vigorous upper-air disturbance plunging southeastward from the Great Lakes. Lots of moving around and stuff. Never happened. It remains to be seen if we will have a few inches of snow. It remains to be seen if there will be enough to go sleigh riding. That's if the police allow anybody to go sleigh riding. They'll probably hold it off until they can get at least two ambulances in readiness at the bottom of the hill.

Meanwhile, early this morning – and as I mentioned this was a day of rain, not snow – every school in the area announced there'd be no school today. It was the Terror of the Weather Channel.

"We are up here at the Connecticut border," an announcer on the Weather Channel standing by the side of I-95 was saying about nine a.m. "We are up here at the border where the governor has ordered that no trucks are to be allowed into the State of Connecticut today. Fear of jackknifing." (This is TRUE!). "But so far, though police have stopped truckers, they have not turned any of them back, yet."

Yeah. Like, do you want this delivery of milk this morning or not?

Five years ago, all this terror even got to the insurance companies. If you are a homeowner, you know this. Before five years ago, your insurance policy automatically covered damage from storms. Now, the price of the policy has gone up, but it doesn't cover storms. Unless you buy a rider that costs even more, when the wind gets above 55 miles an hour, your insurance company cuts and runs. No insurance company is going to cover a monster storm that is going to wipe out the planet. You can bet on that.

Well, maybe it will snow tonight. I hope so. The weather people still think so. They talk about a shift in the computer modeling and how the upper-air disturbance plunging southeastward from the Great Lakes didn't come in quite as fast as they thought. There are, on their weather map, patches of green and blue, patches of white, areas showing sprinkles of snow and areas showing sprinkles of rain.

You know what? We know too much. Hey, if it snows, it snows. How about that?

Probably the last thing Amagansett's Meg Ryan's needs to be is in the press again. But this time it's for her locks. Her choppy blonde hair was voted Number One by top salons across the country. Well, at least she got her hair in order, and women do know that really is the most important thing in the world.

Katie Couric made that hair list along with Jennifer Lopez. That wasn't the only recognition that Ms. Couric received. TV Guide News presented her with the "Person of the Year" award this past week. Hmm, hair and career in order; maybe Meg Ryan could learn from our Katie.

It seems that the Andy Warhol legacy has been captured for all time in either film or photos. Larry Rivers shows up again in vintage video footage in Pie in the Sky: The Brigid Berlin Story. This is a documentary about her life and times, which included a trip with the icons if the art world in the sixties. Larry Rivers was interviewed at that time by her and it looks like Warhol was wrong about only fifteen minutes of fame. He and is crew lives on and on through video.

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

OBSERVATIONS OF AN ISLANDER # 146 DANNY BOY

Have you ever noticed that "Danny Boy" is sung exclusively by men? It sounds like a love song, but why is it almost always sung by men? I thought I'd do some research on the classic Irish song "Danny Boy."

I found at least three separate stories about the origins of the song. One said a professional songwriter named Fred Weatherly, who never set foot in Ireland, wrote it around the mid 1800s. Another said it was written by a harpist named Edward Bunting in the early 1800s. A third story said the words were written by a bereaved father and later set to music.

Well, these academic answers were all conflicting and confusing. I had no choice. I went to the source. I found an Irish chat room on AOL. I asked who wrote "Danny Boy" and was bombarded with answers, each one claiming to be the absolute truth, or perhaps the Absolut truth... the blarney was flying. The consensus was that it was written by a bereaved father.

Through a series of links I will never remember, I ended up in a conversation with Monsignor Joseph Fitzpatrick in County Cork (I love the Internet). We shared our love of iMacs, we both have the bright green ones... well there's a big surprise... and he's sending me a green rosary for my mother because she must be a wonderful woman (she is). He told me the whole story with the authority of a papal bull.

It seems there was a poor farmer in the late 1700s. He had three sons. He lost his wife in childbirth with the last one, named Daniel.

The British routinely conscripted young Irish lads at gunpoint and literally right out of the fields for their wars. They did this up until WWI. Many times a family would only know their son had been taken if some neighbor happened to see the boy in the cart. Sometimes they found out when he didn't come home and they found thrown down tools in the field where he was supposed to be. Once taken, the boys seldom came home. Usually they were killed in foreign lands because the British put the Irish recruits in the front lines to take bullets for the more trained, seasoned and hence more valuable British troops. Since the average life span of a man at that time was about 40 years, if the soldier survived and got out after the duration of whatever war he was in, he often settled somewhere else because it could take two or three years to get home to Ireland and most likely his parents were already dead.

According to His Grace, this farmer had already lost his two elder sons to British conscription. Danny was the last. He was a lad of 15 when the cart came and took him away. The father was overwrought with grief and pain. He quickly succumbed to illness and died within the year.

The farmer's bible was given to the parish priest as was the custom, so he could use it in the church, or pass it along to another parishoner. When the bible came to the priest, he found a loose paper inside called, "My Danny Boy." The priest recopied it, correcting spelling and grammar and it could have been embellished at that point.

It became a popular poem among the locals who had lost sons in the manner of forced conscription. Years later, he said, in the mid 1800s it was put to a tune. Gradually it came to symbolize a father's love for a lost son, and later, it came to mean Ireland's love for all her missing sons. It is always sung by a man. And that's the truth because the Monsignor said so. I can't really say which story is true, but this seems to be the most popular one. I do notice that Danny Boy is commonly sung and or played at the funerals of firemen and policemen, which seems very fitting according to the Monsignor's version.

Here are the lyrics. Please study them, there will be a quiz next Thursday. "Danny Boy"

Oh, Danny Boy, the pipes... the pipes are calling,
From glen to glen and down the mountain side.
The summer's gone and all the leaves are falling,
Tis you, 'Tis you must go and I must bide.
But come ye back, when summer's in the meadow,
or when the valley's hushed and white with snow.
And I'll be here in sunshine or in shadow,
Oh, Danny Boy, Oh, Danny Boy, I love you so!
But when ye come, and all the flowers dying
If I be dead,
as dead I well may be.
Then come and find the place where I am lying,
And kneel and say an Ave there for me.
And I shall hear, though soft you tread above
me,
And all my grave will warmer, sweeter be.
And you shall bend, and tell me that you love
me,
And I shall rest in peace until you come to me.

Venice

Holy Land, but instead go to Byzantium – what is now Istanbul – and sack that City instead. They did, brutally. Although the Crusaders considered this a victory for Christendom, it was, for the Venetians, revenge for the days when the Holy Roman Empire ruled Venice. They waited five hundred years for that revenge. And they got it.

And so it was that from about 1100 until about 1700 Venice was a world power. Their ships and sailors were everywhere. For awhile, Venice ruled Crete and Cyprus and Pelloponesas, also the Greek Islands and much of what is now the northern Italian mainland.

The turning point came when explorers proved you could get to the Orient around Africa, and you didn't have to cross the Mediterranean and go the rest of the way over land. Venice weakened. The Turks administered it. Napoleon took it over. It became part of the Austro-Hungarian empire. And finally, reduced in influence, it joined with others to form Italy in 1866. You know the rest.

Needless to say, there is far more interesting history about this place. Marco Polo was born and raised a Venetian and traveled the world. Vivaldi was from Venice. So was Titian and the great lover Casanova.

What did Cat and I do while we were here? Well we arrived from the mainland on a train that goes across this eight mile causeway – built in 1846 when Venice was under the protection of the King of Austria – and walked across the platform to a water bus that took us to this fancy hotel. We walked for miles up and down the cobblestone paths that sometimes, via the more than 400 stone bridges, cross the canals. We went to museums, to churches, to a concert – the Viennese Symphony Orchestra – in honor of the 300th anniversary of Vivaldi beginning his career as a music teacher. We ate at the Canova Restaurant in the Luna Hotel Baglioni – a delicious dinner of shrimps with polenta appetizer, veal medallions with cream sauce, tagliolini with scampi and selections from the dessert tray – we went in a gondola ride, and we visited the ancient Jewish Ghetto, the first Ghetto in the world, which was liberated by, believe it or not, Napoleon, who threw open the gates and planted a big tree in the ghetto square to honor the Jews, and we fed cracked corn to the enormously overweight pigeons in Plaza San Marco. We also ate at Eligio Paties Montagner's Ristrane do Forni, a restaurant designed to look like the interior of the Orient Express, and had a delicious six course meal, and we visited the shop and factory of two brothers, Sergio and Massimo Boldrin, who, along with hundreds of other manufacturers, make masks for the Venice Winter Carnival. Some of their masks were used in Stanley Kubrick's last film Eyes Wide Shut starring Tom Cruise.

As we leave Venice, the city is beginning to prepare itself for the great Winter Carnival, scheduled for February 10 to 20. During the dark days, when Venice was in decline between 1500 and 1789, the city would hold a great festival every February to welcome the springtime. It was, by all accounts, a time of great debauchery – when "anything goes," as an eighteenth century traveler wrote. "If women want to be men, and men women, that doesn't bother anybody, and one can dress after the fashion of primeval foreign peoples, even the most remote, unusual and mysterious to them. Absolute freedom to do what you like is the order of the day!" Besides opening the ghetto, Napoleon, in 1797, put a stop to the Winter Carnival.

Well, they revived the Festival in 1979. And they've been holding it, annually, since. The entire island is the setting for this carnival, a sort of Mardi Gras of costumes, masks, concerts, drinking and dancing, acrobats, fireworks, balloons and confetti. And a counterpoint to the Venice International Film Festival, which is held for a week every August.

Maybe the Hamptons ought to have a Winter Carnival in February. It's pretty quiet here then. We need something. We would welcome spring and could give prizes for the best period costume, best mask, best fireworks and so on and so forth. Just a thought.

not legitimize the government's power to compel the speaker to alter the message by including one more acceptable to others."

Editorials in favor of the decision could be found in Newsday, The Chicago Tribune, The New Republic, and The Boston Globe among many other major media.

The gay controversy is not the only one to be hounding the New York parade of late. The organizers of the annual parade, who traditionally published "the line of march" (that is, who was in the parade and in what order) in the city's two Irish publications, The Irish Echo and The Irish Voice, before the parade. But as of three years ago the line of march was published in the Post. The two Irish papers say this is in retaliation for criticisms the papers have directed against the organizers, who counter that it is simply a matter of the Post having a greater circulation. The Irish periodicals say that the parade has been hijacked by the current organizers and does not reflect all of the Irish community, and that the parade committee had become an old boys network. It will be interesting to see how this plays out.

There is a St. Patrick's Day parade in so many different cities in the world. Here in the U.S. one expects Chicago, Boston and New York, with their large Irish populations, to honor the saint, but there are also parades in: Detroit; Stroudsburg, Pennsylvania; Naples, Florida; San Diego; Savannah, Georgia, among many other cities.

Dublin, where one would find a deep tradition of St. Patrick Day activities, has cancelled its St. Patrick's Day parade due to the outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease that has threatened Europe's livestock industry. As people can carry foot-and-mouth disease, the Irish government has discourage large gatherings of people. Not only has the venerated St. Patrick's Day parade been cancelled, but sporting events as well. The Golfing Union of Ireland has cancelled virtually all of its matches.

Jim McDaid, Ireland's minister for tourism and sports, said that if the foot-and-mouth danger has passed in some months, the St. Patrick's Day parade might be held this summer.

Europe's disappointed parade goers might turn eastward, to Moscow, where the St. Patrick's Society of Russia and the Celtic Society of Russia will hold a St. Patrick's weekend March 16-18. On the 16th at the Central House of Artists, there will be a St. Patrick's Folk Festival; on the 17th a Fancy Dress Street Parade on Sary Arbat Street, followed by more music; on the 18th, a genuine St. Patrick's Day parade, Russian style, on Novy Arbat Street. One must wonder what the Cold War leaders of the Soviet Union, Stalin, Krushchev, Brezhnev, would have made of this.

Southampton College honor Adrianne and Jerry Cohen

What a festive time we had as Adrianne and Jerry Cohen were honored at Laura Belle in New York. Host Roger Rosenblatt, author of Rules for Aging, held a fun College Bowl contest, the evening's highlight. The prize was an all expense paid week long trip to Anguilla, an island in the Caribbean. The competition was fierce. One question was, "Where did Adrianne and Jerry spend their first year of marriage?" The answer was Iceland, and Jerry confided to us what better place could newlyweds want with 24 hours of darkness. All the proceeds will benefit the Marine and Environmental Science Program at the college.

Anna Rochegova at The Blue Heron

Patrick Christiano of Dayton-Halstead Real Estate in East Hampton hosted a reception for Anna Rochegova at The Blue Heron Arts Center in New York. Her paintings and collages of Williamsburg, New York will be on display in the gallery at 123 E. 24th Street until April 23. Over 100 friends and art lovers attended. Anna's eight-foot long oil paintings of the "Williamsburg Bridge" were especially popular with everyone it seemed. I must admit I, too, was enchanted with the bridge paintings as well as with the artist herself. Treat yourself to a viewing, I am sure you will be impressed.

Shop 'til You Drop...With Maria Tennariello

Well, after the biggest snowstorm ever, I am back in action. I had to have my driveway plowed in order to get on the road to do some shopping. Sorry I missed it last week. Let's shop!

Starting out in East Quogue, John and I stopped in at the Village Prime Meat Shoppe on Main Street, where everyone knows you can get that fresh loaf of Sullivan Street bread daily. Fresh soups are made every day and John is a big fan of Sonny's soups. We picked up some soup and a sandwich and decided that we should check out the beach after the storm. You can call ahead with an order at the Village Prime Meat Shoppe at 653-8071.

Steps away there is a cute shop called Respectable Collectibles Antiques Shop that specializes in 19th and early 20th century English, Continental and country items. Check it out, I'm sure you will find something of interest here.

Nearby at Lynne's Cards & Gifts you will find quite a selection of magazines, greeting cards, gift items, balloons, photo frames, toys and much more. At Lynne's there is a plain paper fax service available also.

Charos Custom Audio and Home Theater Specialists on Cameron Street in Southampton now has the flat Plasma (that is all the rage right now) TV on display. Take a look, you will love it.

At Gallery Eclectic on Main Street in Southampton you will get excited when you see Catherine Angiel's beautifully designed jewelry that is designed exclusively for this gallery. There is a special piece here called "I Believe" that I am considering purchasing for my mom's special birthday coming up next weekend.

You should check out the "Additional 25% off Sale" at Complements Lingerie located on Main Street in Southampton and Bridgehampton. Now is the time to stock up on extras for the upcoming spring season.

The Parrish Art Museum on Jobs Lane in Southampton is having a winter sale at The Museum

Shop and is offering from 20% to 70% off on selected merchandise including books, mobiles, gifts, jewelry, CDs toys and much more. This sale will run until Friday, March 30.

I would like to wish Headly Studio in Sag Harbor a Happy Birthday. This shop has been located in Sag Harbor for ten years and they are having a 50% off birthday sale on furniture. Also, there are lots of clothing delicately called "Generous Fashions" so do check that one out. Steve, the owner of Headly Studio, will be going to Anguilla and promises to bring back lots of merchandise for the upcoming spring season.

Well, time to run home and take care of the rest of the snow that is on my front porch. Let's hope this is the last storm. But this too shall end, after all, for spring is only a week or two away...

Until next week. Ciao and Happy End of Winter Shopping!

-Maria Tennariello

ART COMMENTARY

With Marion Wolberg Weiss

Conversations with: Howard Clifford

Howard Clifford's work can't be directly related to his integration of other art forms, like last week's artists (Beryl Bernay and Dennis Leri) who were influenced by both acting and writing. Instead, Mr. Clifford uses fusion to suggest both a marriage of image and idea and one of process and product. What we have is integration on another level. Even so, he still shares his use of language with Ms. Bernay and Mr. Leri.

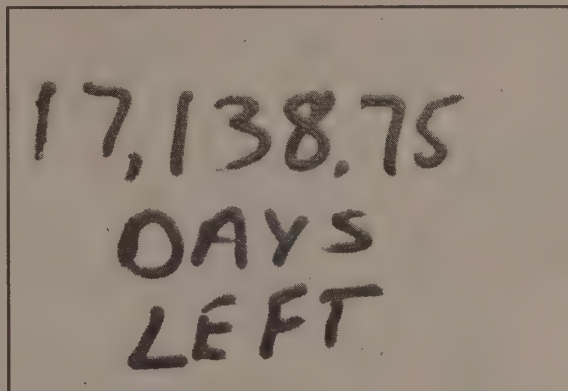

Take for example his "On Going Project" where he created a painting a day, sending out 1,500 cards that asked people to send $24 if they would like to buy a work.

This appeal was not meant to be a unique marketing device; it was simply part of Mr. Clifford's art creation. The works (product) may have been finished but the process was still continuing – an interactive event between artist and viewer which often characterizes conceptual art.

Subsequent and similar conceptual art projects included "Choose Your Words Carefully," where Mr. Clifford asked people to select four words that would then be poured in acrylic on a stretched canvas. Not exactly your normal painting-by-numbers.

Often, Mr. Clifford's unorthodox works employ language more definitively. His "Some Days Are More Interesting Than Others" offered viewers a diptych that included a page from his journal—a project related to another series documenting Mr. Clifford's house-sharing adventures. The texts (which were part of a Guild Hall exhibition) read like a real soap opera and become a vehicle for interaction between the spectator, the text and Mr. Clifford, whom most gallery goers probably didn't even know.

"On Going Project"

A visit to Mr. Clifford's North Sea home reveals additional interactive aspects of his language usage. The walls are covered with canvases with sayings like, "My First Wife Was a Lawyer," "I Hope He Dies," and "Fat People Are Stupid."

We can not escape from being drawn into the pieces as we ask ourselves, "Is this autobiographical? Did the artist have a wife who was a lawyer? Is he trying to establish a narrative here, with the separate works conceptually connected to each other?"

Ultimately, these works say more about our perception of Mr. Clifford than about the aesthetic quality of his art. The bottom line is this: Do we like this Clifford guy or not, even though we don't really know him?

Most artists initially ask for their work to be judged; Mr. Clifford is putting himself directly on the line, asking that we validate his character above all else.

HONORING THE ARTIST: CHRISTA MAIWALD

East Hampton artist Christa Maiwald is a true original, no easy feat considering the myriad of special people who reside on the East End. Her art cannot be determined by formulas and rules, her individual series evolving from varied states of mind, her body of work encompassing diverse media including video, film, performance, sculpture, embroidery, felt and origami.

What connect these multiple approaches are their plasticity, malability, and "hands-on" approach – the latter term particularly relevant in describing Ms. Maiwald herself. Not only does she literally use her hands when indulging in favorite pastimes (baking and gardening) but she also isn't afraid to get "her hands dirty" when expressing social/political themes through her art.

Consider this week's cover, "Art Fool," as an example: a clown balancing three models of prominent New York City museums. At first glance, the image seems pleasant, humorous, but perhaps nothing more. But why a clown? Is she making a barbed statement about museums? Probably.

We can recall other such works, subtle yet pointed: "Hamptons Blue," with images painted on wallpaper that makes fun of the summer crowd. Ms. Maiwald, admitting to such subversity, says simply and succinctly, "My work does have an edge, shooting holes in conventions."

Not all of Ms. Maiwald's art has a political bent.

When entering the home that she shares with her husband, Mark Segal, and their two children, Caitlin and Devin, we can't help but notice an arresting installation on the wall: rows and rows of fake flowers in water bottles coated with eleven layers of latex, rubber and gauge. It's a knockout – beautiful and funky at the same time.

This opposition is a key to Ms. Maiwald's art. She calls it "the good girl/bad girl syndrome." The good part represents work that is funny, poignant, caring; the bad part is subversive and often sexy. (A recent series where male genitals are adorned with clothes is an effective "bad girl" personification.) Ms. Maiwald creates other subjects as well where the "good" is represented by adolescence and the "bad" by adulthood.

Regardless of this focus on the psychological aspects of human behavior, Ms. Maiwald also deals with philosophical themes like her "Illumination" series. Influenced by her interest in Asian art, these pieces feature provocative sayings like, "Gaining Strength at the Top of the World."

While we're not quite sure what Ms. Maiwald will come up with next, we can be certain that her work will be a surprise – revealing itself in stages as her current series of colorful, small chairs do now. Unfolding, little by little, to delight and inform.

—Marion Wolberg Weiss

Ms. Maiwald will be featured in a group show at Guild Hall opening on April 14.

HAIR FULL FRONTAL

What ho? A FULL MONTY for the naughty boys? This time its women up there on display and so, presumably, it's O.K. to show their frontal nudity and, Heavens to Betsy! One lady's pubic hair has been CUT (trimmed into a heart shape), COLORED (a clownish pink), TEASED (to look like Bill Shatner's rug), and BLOW DRIED! You may surmise that the movie, BLOW DRY, is about competing hairdressers and the women put upon with scissors, razors, combs, and heated guns are their models, as they are called in hair-styling championship contests. They are the basis of win, lose or, also-ran judgement. Their appearance... right up to the final "Total Look" . . . decides the fate of the dueling hair-bangers, garishly portrayed, in a desperate attempt, by the creator of THE FULL MONTY to duplicate the lucrative success of that memorable film, now shuffling along on Broadway in the all-together.

DYE CAN'T GET THE SAD GRAY OUT

As in, The Full Monty, the place is plucky Northern England, where the blue collars are grayed, threadbare and polyester but, not worn out . . . despite the blight of Thatcherism. In the Yorkshire Town, Keighley, (take in a good look at it from a hilltop shot in one scene), we are introduced too the first hairdresser, lovely Natasha Richardson, who tells her doctor what he is reluctant to tell her . . . she has only a short time to live. The grim news sets the movie into a dank, down-turned, stringy, split end, soap opera funkiness that cannot be buoyed by shampooing... it is only teased unconvincingly so, it keeps falling flat.

Natasha's salon, which she operates with her female companion-in-life, Rachel Griffiths, is not far from her ex-husband, Alan Rickman's, hair shop. He was, at one time, a world champion hairdresser but alas, a broken heart has left him basically barbering with their son, Josh Harnet, working beside him. They resent the two women, but, cannot get them out of their hair. It looks like their lives will never gel. But then . . . TA-DAH-H-H!

THE 2000 BRITISH HAIRSTYLING CHAMPIONSHIPS

Their uncombed, gentle town is chosen as the site for the Grand Challenge. The battle for the top hair stylist . . . champion above all others, . . . Fastest scissors and surest comb...hottest gun and coolest spray-fixed design will leave just the very best man reigning supreme. Into town, minces Rickman's nemesis, London Successful, Bill Nighy, whom Rickman out-dueled constantly in the old days but, now is denigrated by Nighy . . . shaming him publicly. Son, Josh, and ex-wife, Natasha are hurt by this. They try to get Alan to fight back... Natasha knows they could win but, only together as a team. . . including her lover, Rachel, who used to be Alan's model! Oh, dear, dear-me-oh-my! There is much hair tearing. In Natasha's case, it has to be wig tearing, as . . . well, you know. Alan and son are shocked. Will this get him cracking? Who cares! Josh has fallen for Bad Guy Nighy's attractive daughter. Rachel knows nothing of Natasha's problem. Nighy and his ring-perforated sidekick are busy sabotaging other contestants and, the funny little town loves all the eccentricities.

LET THE LIONS OUT AND THE CONTESTS BEGIN

To say the vast congregation of hairdressers are eccentric says naught. The incredible shearing, clipping, twisting, spritzing, primping . . . tacky jokes, gloomy morbidity and bad sight gags simply get in the way of an over-coifed idea that had no merit to begin with. The actors, being Brit-rock-steady, carry on well enough. However, the underlying sleazy sadness that permeates the carryings-on, probably emanates from their innate well articulated taste, realizing that what should have been satirical fun . . . is only pitiful pandering.

In any case, a female full frontal cannot be as hilariously pointed and turgid as a naughty little boy's.

LONG WHARF, SAG HARBOR WWW.BAYSTREET.ORG

silvia lehrer's cooking column

While studying abroad more than 30 years ago, I took a brief holiday in Ireland. As memory serves me there was a calm simplicity about the people and the country. I remember stopping at a cozy teashop while touring the Ring of Kerry on Ireland's West Coast. While I don't recall in detail the china cup I drank from or the quaint surroundings of the small tearoom, I do remember the warmed pot the tea was served from. The water was freshly drawn and freshly boiled with fine quality tea that was allowed to brew. This sums up exactly what Irish food is all about. There is an unrelenting naturalness to it; the food never assaults or shocks and the seasonings are mild.

In Ireland, in the homes and on the farms, the people take pride in their local products, such as fresh salmon and newborn vegetables, locally made pork products and earthy, hearth-baked breads.

Though corned beef and cabbage may appear on many a menu to celebrate St. Patrick's Day this weekend, in Ireland they are, no doubt, feasting on poached or baked salmon. So if you're feeling a bit Irish you might like to prepare Boxty to accompany the salmon. This traditional potato cake incorporates mashed and grated raw potato, flour, milk and butter. The lightly kneaded dough is formed into large flat cakes and baked on a griddle.

Another appealing idea to keep the faith is to prepare an untraditional shepherd's pie; a planked salmon dish crusted over with scallion mashed potatoes. This may not be particularly Irish but it is as simple and straightforward as the people are.

PLANKED SALMON

Planking fish is a form of grilling at an angle where the fish is fastened to a board of kiln-dried oak for the unique flavors the wood imparts to the fish. Another reference to planking is to cover any exposed surfaces around the fish with a decoration of mashed potatoes, much like a shepherd's pie.

Serves 4

1 1/2 pound salmon fillet
Grated zest of lemon
2 teaspoons paprika
1 tablespoon raw brown sugar
1 tablespoon coarse (kosher) salt
Freshly ground pepper to taste

Preheat oven to 375 degrees.

1. Place the fish on a well-oiled baking sheet, or metal serving platter. Rub the fish with a mixture of lemon zest, paprika, brown sugar, coarse salt and pepper and allow to marinate at room temperature for 20-30 minutes. Place in preheated oven and bake for 8-10 minutes.

Preheat broiler.

2. Spoon or pipe the mashed potatoes (following recipe) in a pastry bag fitted with a large star-tipped tube decoratively around the edge of the salmon platter. Place under preheated broiler until the potatoes are delicately browned. Serve at once.

MASHED POTATOES WITH SCALLIONS AND BROTH

A simply delicious mashed potato dish on its own or combine with the baked salmon above for an untraditional shepherd's pie.

2-2 1/4 pounds Russet potatoes, peeled and cut coarsely
1/3-1/2 cup chicken broth or skim milk
2-3 scallions, rinsed, trimmed and thinly sliced
1-2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil or unsalted butter
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

1. Cook potatoes in salted boiling water for 16-18 minutes, with cover ajar, until potatoes are tender when pierced with a knife.

2. In a small saucepan simmer stock or milk with scallions over low heat for 4-5 minutes.

3. Drain potatoes and return to dry, but still warm, saucepan and mash with potato masher. Beat in the olive oil, then gradually add the scallion infused liquid and continue to beat until light and fluffy. Season to taste with salt and pepper and serve hot or as directed above.

BOXTY

Boxty is a traditional potato dish, celebrated in the following rhyme: Boxty on the griddle, boxty in the pan, if you can't make boxty, you'll never get your man.

Yield: 4 large cakes

1 cup grated raw potato
1 cup, cooked mashed potato
1 1/3 cup all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons butter, melted

1/4 - 1/3 cup milk
1 teaspoon fresh thyme leaves

1. Put the grated potatoes in a clean kitchen towel or in the palm of your hands and ring over a bowl, catching the liquid. Spoon off and discard the liquid that separates at top reserving the starch at the bottom. Add the grated potatoes with the mashed potatoes to the starch and stir to mix.

2. Place the flour and baking powder in a strainer and sift, by tapping the strainer over the potato mixture. Stir in the melted butter and adding milk as necessary to make a pliable dough. Knead lightly on a floured surface until no longer sticky. Be careful not to add too much flour. Divide equally into four parts and form large flat cakes. With the back of a knife, gentle mark each cake into quarters without cutting through.

3. Place a griddle or heavy skillet over medium heat and grease with butter or oil. Place cakes, one or two at a time and cook about 3 minutes on each side. Serve hot.

Take A Hike!

It's time to let out a well-kept secret: there are, literally, thousands of acres of preserved Pine Barrens land under the management of the Suffolk County Parks Department and the Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC) about twenty minutes northwest of Southampton in northern Hampton Bays, Riverhead and Manorville where the public can go hiking on (almost) endless trail systems. Here you will find lots of outdoor enjoyment for the taking, including beautiful natural ponds and seldom-hiked trails.

At one time Pine Barrens covered, according to historical records, nearly 25% of Long Island. Of this vast acreage, only about 100,000 acres remain in Central and Eastern Long Island. Dominated by pitch pine and scrub oak, the Barrens are often dotted with kettle holes (small ponds). The Long Island Pine Barrens afford protection to the 3-5 trillion gallons of public drinking water located in deep recharge aquifers and hydrologists have estimated that the Pine Barrens recharge about 175 million gallons of purified water each day to those aquifers.

The David A. Sarnoff Pine Barrens Preserve, a whopping 2,183 acres, has a fascinating history. It is located between Route 104 and County Road 63 in Riverhead and was gifted to the State of New York by the Radio Corporation of America (RCA) in 1978. RCA had purchased the property in the early 1900s to conduct pioneering experiments in radio communications. By the '20s, this facility, along with the RCA facility in Rocky Point which was also dedicated to the NY State Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC), formed the hub of important research in worldwide radio communications. By the mid-70s, satellite communication technology largely replaced land-based stations and RCA closed its facilities while offering the land to the DEC. The DEC's foresters and biologists drafted a plan, after evaluating the property's vast natural resources, that protects these resources and balances the many recreational uses to avoid conflicts.

Last winter, on Christmas Day in fact, my husband David and I went hiking here after a snowfall. We actually heard the call of a Great Horned Owl deep in the otherwise silent woods! This is an almost mystically beautiful place, filled with wildlife, far from anything noisily man-made.

There are three interconnected trails that you can choose from posted at the entrance to the Sarnoff preserve on Route 104. Permission is required, but will be granted, from the DEC before hiking here. (See information at the end of this article.)

The preserves under the auspices of the County require a "Green Key Card" which can be purchased at Sears Bellows Park in Hampton Bays for $20. These cards entitle the holders to park entry for 3 years.

Included in the roster of County parks in the Riverhead-Hampton Bays area are Sears Bellows, Indian Island, Robert Cushman Murphy Park and, my personal favorite, Cranberry Bog Park.

Sear Bellows County Park offers many activities, some of which are seasonal: hiking and horseback riding (year-round), camping, swimming, rowboat rentals, fishing and hunting. The park is also home to the famous "Big Duck." This 1000-acre park in the Pine Barrens has an extensive trail system that attracts both hikers and horseback riders alike. There is a stable that offers lessons, boarding and trail rides all year. This is truly a sportsman's paradise, with freshwater pond fishing for bluegill, bass, perch and pickerel permitted between sunrise and sunset. Sears Bellows is located in northern Hampton Bays on Bellows Pond Road (take a left off of Flanders Rd. just before Big Duck, heading north).

EAST END FARMING WITH JOE GERGELA

DAY TWO in Ukraine really began my adventure. I spent most of the day touring Kiev, visiting the historical and cultural aspects of the capital. The most impressive buildings were the Orthodox Churches. The gold leaf faces and the cathedral size of the churches were tremendous. Inside the artifacts and icons were magnificent. At St. Michael's, I went into the catacombs dating to 400 AD and after, used by the people to protect themselves from invaders such as the barbarians and the Huns. I also went to the local farmers market to check out the produce and meat. The green market was inside with stalls for various purveyors. There was everything you would find at Hunts Point in New York City, from asparagus to zucchini. The meat section was excellent except for the absence of beef. I did not have any beef at all for 3 weeks. The Ukraine had sold off their beef to Turkey for their hides. There is also a shortage of feed grains, such as grain corn, so the cattle industry is basically non-existent. I see market opportunity for the U.S. possibly in getting the beef industry going again. Later in the day it was time to get to the train station to begin my journey to farm country in the southern part of Ukraine. The train station in Kiev was pretty large, not as big as Penn Station, but still big. Most of the access to the trains was outside. We had a lot of luggage so I paid a porter $2 to bring our bags to the train. The train itself, a diesel, was very long and quite old.

A little while later we were on our way to Zaporizhia, a manufacturing city about 500 miles from Kiev. This was the first of four trips on the overnight train (about 12 1/2 hours) each time. The berths were small, usually four people per berth. It was strange to me but common for the Ukrainians to share berths with total strangers. I had paid for a berth for two as I did not really want to share the tiny space with people I did not know. The berth was comfortable. Each car has its own common bathroom and is maintained by two attendants to see to the passengers' needs and to keep the coal heater going. The coal heater was basically a central forced hot air system. It was below zero outside and the cold could be felt through the walls of the car. During the trip, the attendants would stop by to serve tea, coffee, or soft drinks. We had brought bread (the best I ever had - even better than in France) cheese, beer (also excellent) fruit and breakfast cereal. The oranges from Spain were the best tasting and juiciest I ever had and I've had fresh from Florida, Texas, and California many, many times. The train ride was uneventful. It took me a while to adjust to the stops and bumps along the way. I really did not sleep much the first trip.

Finally, we reached Zaporizhia about 7:30 a.m. We were greeted by Slava Sergiyenko, the Executive Director of the Zaporizhia Private Farmers Association along with his friend, Nikoli. Slava wore the traditional Russian fur hat (later I bought one for myself) and looked like the Russians I have seen on TV news broadcasts. Nikoli had a little Russian car that barely held our luggage. We squeezed in and were on our way to Prymorsk rayon (county) another 3 1/2 hours by car, 5 1/2 by bus to where I would be spending most of my time for the next 3 weeks. Zaporizhia is a city of about 750,000 residents. It is a pretty good sized city that looks a lot like Pittsburgh or Cleveland. We left and about twenty minutes later were outside the city heading south to the Sea of Azov. As soon as we were outside the city, I saw my first glimpse of Ukrainian countryside. The farmland was dark and rich, about 6 feet of topsoil and as far as I could see in every direction. We passed over a large river that goes through most of the country. We passed through many tiny villages on the way to Prymorsk. Most of the farmers live in the villages. The residents each have a couple of acres for their vegetables, fruit and potatoes as they are self-sufficient.

We stopped at a cafe about half way to stretch and have some coffee and a bite to eat. I had to make a potty stop as well. It was my first experience using an outhouse. For the most part, I had access to modern facilities but I did have to use more basic facilities at different times. Most of the cafes were nice, small but good food and good selection of drinks. Another hour and a half and we were in Prymorsk, all the way to the sea at the bottom of the country. Prymorsk is a seaside summer resort town for the middle class from Russia, Bulgaria, Ukraine and some European visitors. Most of the farmers in Prymorsk were of Bulgarian descent. The Bulgarians had emigrated to Ukraine in the early 1900s. Prymorsk was a small city/town of about 20,000 residents. Soon we were at my hotel, a nice modern hotel on the water. I actually had the suite where Ukrainian President Kuchma stays.

After we got settled in, it was time for a dinner party to meet all my hosts. They had hired a couple of ladies from town to cook for me. They had prepared a five course traditional Ukrainian meal with vegetables, borscht (which I grew to love), meat and fish as well as plenty of Ukrainian vodka. A number of the farmers had come to meet me so there were plenty of toasts and conversation. It did not take long for us to hit it off. They were really were not much different than my farmer friends at home. We were off to a good start. (continued next week.)

Indian Island, located on the east side of Rte.105 in Riverhead, is comprised of 275 acres at the estuarine mouth of the Peconic River. What was formerly the 'island' at Indian Island Park is now connected to the mainland by a causeway composed almost entirely of white sand and there are incredible views of Flanders Bay.

Robert Cushman Murphy Park is a favorite among hikers and birders alike. Rare coastal plain habitat provides great opportunities for finding endangered plants and sighting unusual bird species. Hunting is allowed here seasonally, managed by the DEC, so be sure to check before entering areas that may be affected. Fishing for large mouth bass, eastern chain pickerel, yellow perch, pumpkinseed sunfish and others is permitted by NYS licensed fisherman on 60-acre Swan Pond. This park is located on Old River Road in Manorville. Take Rte.24 (Flanders Rd.) all the way past the traffic circle by the diner in Riverhead and, when you've reached the entrance to the Long Island Expressway, take your second left onto River Road. The first left off of this road is Old River Road.

Also in Manorville you can visit the Pine Barrens Trails Information Center on County Road 111. This facility was created to provide the public with environmental education regarding the Pine Barrens area. There is a short, interpretive "Blueberry Loop" trail on the grounds that gives visitors a sampling of the Pine Barrens environment. Open May-October, Friday-Monday.

Cranberry Bog County Park on County Road 63 in Riverhead, about one mile south of the traffic circle by the diner on the left hand side, is a real gem. The trail in this preserve is a little over a mile long and it wraps its way around a beautiful lake where you will occasionally find the colorful and elusive wood duck. This was originally operated as a cranberry bog and there is still evidence of the water distribution system employed in the earlier part of last century and markers that describe how the bog was operated. About three quarters of the way around the lake you cross over an old wooden bridge that spans a small river. Go here after a snowfall for a magical hike.

Walking: Even Couch Potatoes Can Do It

Though there is a tiny whiff of spring in the air, couch-potato season is still very much with us. As we all know, the cold winter months are much more conducive to sprawling by the fire after a rich, rib-sticking dinner than they are to training for a marathon or setting a swimming record at the local beach club.

Yes, there are many more viable excuses in the wintertime for not exercising, such as our recent blizzard, than there are in the summer when our only excuses could be hurricanes or heat waves. But, with a little creativity, exercise can be worked into winter schedules and we might even end up having a little fun along the way.

The good news: cold weather creates a prime fatburning opportunity because your body burns extra calories simply to stay warm. This is just music to the ears of the couch potato, hater of anything even remotely aerobic.

A winter workout can also help offset symptoms of seasonal affective disorder (SAD-occurring when we are exposed to reduced daylight) and other mild depressive disorders because exercise releases endorphins—those powerful mood-enhancing hormones naturally existing in the body that create the “high” distance runners often report.

Brisk winter walks, even more fun during or after a snow, work almost all leg muscles and, depending on your pace and distance, can burn up to 300 calories in 30 minutes to an hour. Winter cycling and jogging are also great workouts if the streets are not icy.

But if you've been spending your winter on the couch and your exercise routine has been made up of a series of trips to the fridge and back, don't just run right-out and try and jog a few miles; snow shovelers aren't the only ones prone to winter heart attacks. Start SLOWLY! It takes a lot more effort to exercise in the cold (hence the enhanced caloric burn) and there are precautions you should take to avoid injury.

First, dress in layers to avoid losing too much body heat during rest periods or from becoming overheated during more vigorous workouts. In addition, clothing layers that hold moisture may cause loss of body heat during lower intensity exercise. So avoid certain materials that absorb water and become “soggy”, such as cotton, and look for others, such as wool that will “wick” moisture away from the skin, for innermost layers. Also, never neglect hats and gloves. After once being on the verge of frostbite as a child, I can't stress enough the importance of protecting extremities.

Second, remember to drink plenty of water. General dehydration is very common in athletes during cold weather due not only to their reduced consumption of water, but also due to water lost by the body as it warms each cold breath. Additional water is lost as perspiration accumulates in the innermost clothing layers. So, drink up when heading outside.

Finally, protect your exposed skin, especially if it is dry, with lots of moisturizer before and after exposure to cold temperatures and wind. And while that hot shower may feel just great when you're back indoors, it will only dry your skin out more. Go for warm instead and apply a soothing, aromatic lotion to skin after you've toweled off.

While hypothermia is much more common among seniors than younger people due to decreased circulation, if your body doesn't get sufficiently warmed up after several minutes of vigorous outdoor exercise, you may be a candidate. Add another layer of clothing and drink a warm, non-alcoholic beverage or head back indoors.

Walking is a great exercise if you reach your target heart rate and maintain it for 20 to 30 minutes. (To determine your target rate, go to content.health.msn.com and type in 'target heart rate' in the “Search Health” engine and then follow instructions.) Walking requires no special equipment, other than supportive shoes and, while you may burn more calories outside in cold weather, you can walk at a gym or even in front of your television on a treadmill.

Even if you don't approach winter activity with the discipline needed for training for a marathon, a simple walk with your retriever or a playful romp in the snow with your family are wonderful ways to get up off the couch and get going.

POLICE BLOTTER

Southampton Town Police arrested the bartender at the Green Derby when he served an underage undercover youth working with the police. There was a teen night at the bar, the police said, but there was no check in place to keep minors from being served liquor.

Another major smack bust in the Hamptons (as Puffy Daddy's entourage refer to these environs). Leon J. Langhorne of Riverhead was arrested as the result of a long investigation of heroin sales in the Riverside-Riverhead area. Langhorne was confronted by police in the parking lot of the Department of Motor Vehicles on Route 58. He resisted arrested, tried to run over one officer and then fought with others before being subdued and charged with five counts. In addition to heroin he had marijuana in his possession.

The above arrest was only days after the apprehension of two Hampton Bays men, Dennis M. Spellman, Jr. and Humberto G. Rodriguez, who had just come back from New York with sixty-two bags of heroin which police say the pair were going to sell in Hampton Bays.

Riverhead Town Police reported twenty vending machines vandalized at the Tanger Outlet.

Someone's in the doghouse. Long Island Sheds and Gazebos of Riverhead reported the theft of a doghouse - which was eventually discovered on a local resident's property. The authorities, investigating the matter further, impounded the canine dwelling.

Also in Riverhead, ladies of the evening or any other time for that matter, continue to ply their trade. But one unfortunate ho' was stayed in her line of work when she propositioned an undercover police officer

Two burglaries in Southampton Village netted about $10,000. Someone used a maul to break the glass doors of BookHampton and robbed a cash register containing $205 from the store. It is the third time in four years that BookHampton has been the target of burglary. This last incident happened about three in the morning. Only a few days before that, an employee of Cook Pony Farm Real Estate discovered on a Sunday morning that an $400 Cannon camera and about $8,800 in cash were missing from the office.

There is touched by an angel and then there is someone stealing angels. A Sag Harbor woman reported that two outdoor terra cotta angels had been stolen from her property.

-Jerry Cimisi

I am writing this for all of us who have someone in our lives whom we love and would never want to see any harm come to. Love is a wonderful feeling, one of its benefits is it takes us away from otherwise insurmountable situations to plateaus of, "we can overcome this together".

Then there comes that dark cursed time we all dread, illness, which, with all the love in the world, is the most difficult test of that love. Do we lose faith, or do we draw from that love the strength we need to overcome even the worst situations? Our family has come to that point where we need to concentrate all our love and help one of our family members get through a dark time. Michael is my son-in-law and has been living with HVC for about ten years, that we know of. His condition was always taken very lightly because he always looked so good and was in otherwise top notch health. We all felt that with his monitoring of his diet he would live to be a hundred. Michael is the kind of guy everyone loves. He is never too busy to help anyone and always has a smile on his face. Such expressions as "mench", "he hasn't got a bad bone in his body" and many other similar phrases have been used to describe Michael. I am sure some of you had the pleasure of having Michael do a drapery or shade installation in your homes, in which case you know exactly what I mean. This past winter reality set in big time. One morning Michael went to work to do his drapery installations out in the Hamptons and on the way out he started coughing up blood. He returned home where the situation worsened, he was bleeding profusely. Michael was rushed to Stony Brook hospital where the doctors were at a loss. It was a nightmare, the weekend, with no specialists on staff and a relatively new disease which few specialists can even understand fully. It was determined that Michael's portal vein had burst due to the fact that the liver could no longer handle the amount of blood that it had to process. Michael's liver was obviously a lot more damaged than had been suspected. A new procedure for the liver, called a stint, seemed the only way to neutralize this situation. The problem now was that none of the staff at Stony brook had ever done this procedure and it is quite complicated. A stint, in as simple terms as I understand it, is a metal tube attached to the vein and inserted through the liver to relieve the pressure, hopefully stopping the portal vein from bleeding. Fortunately Michael's wife knew of such a surgeon and she called him, thank God he was home, and he rushed to the hospital to set up the procedure. Michael was saved and has been put on a liver transplant list. Anyone familiar with transplant lists must know that it is extremely difficult. There is an excellent chance that a partial liver transplant will increase Michael's chances. The liver is an organ that can regenerate itself. A donor can regenerate the piece that is donated and the recipient can grow more healthy liver tissue from the piece donated. The match is the key. Body weight has to be similar, blood type, and general health. I implore anyone who would be willing to share his or her love for life for Michael to please call Nora at 631-286-4690.

Dan's LETTERS

MORE LIGHT ON THE MATTER

Dear Dan,

I wanted to give you an update on the light pollution bill. Many thanks for contacting Senator LaValle. He E-mailed me his pledge to support the bill. The Assembly has introduced bill A5352 which is an improvement on S783, and one that I have asked LaValle to Sponsor in the Senate. See the web site <http://www.assembly.state.ny.us/leg/billsearch.html>, and insert A5352 for the text and summary for this bill. I'll also contact Thiele.

Thank you so much for helping with this effort. It will certainly make a difference, and will prevent another senseless death due to incorrect lighting on streets.

The article you wrote has been circulated throughout the legislature, and has been very helpful.

KUDOS FOR "GREEN"

Dear Dan,

In the Hamptons, Dan's Papers is a favorite of mine. In the City, I read it on the Web. This week I was particularly impressed with the informative article "Building Green" by Helga Morpurgo.

I wish to congratulate the editors of Dan's Papers and Ms. Morpurgo for an article that is timely and very well-written. Her knowledge and research are invaluable to me and homeowners seeking to cut down escalating costs of energy. (My last heating bill was almost double last year's.) The technical information Ms. Morpurgo provided will be put to good use. I look forward to more articles of this caliber.

I will send a copy to my relatives in Greenport, who are interested in PV Systems. My aunt in Europe is using solar power almost 20 years. It is common there - perhaps more of us can learn how to conserve energy, ecology and costs.

Also, Mr. Dan Rattiner brought up an important issue in his fine article "Keep Out." He has a good sense of humor in "Blast Off." And I enjoyed "Green Monkeys" by Mickey and Betty Paraskevas.

Thanks again for a fine publication and for such good reporters.

"BEST FRIENDS" OR ENEMIES?

Dear Dan,

This is for producer Marty Richards and others.

Re: The current television show Some Of My Best Friends Are... We think that's the same identical title of a delightful 1970 film produced by Marty Richards and directed by Mervyn Nelson, although the television show seems to be based on the movie Kiss My Guido. The film was originally titled The Gay Bar, and later just The Bar, finally the title above. Like the current TV show it wasn't very successful (it featured similar themes). But it was chock full of cameo surprises, like the charming and endearing Sylvia Sims, the gorgeous Candy Darling, the mysterious and sinister Carlton Carpenter, the weird "Fellini Faces" courtesy of Metropolitan Opera and countless others. Was there a video?

Perhaps Mr. Richards can be coaxed into releasing it to home screens and thus help in erasing the bad taste of the dismal TV show.

Cheers from
"The Boys In The Band"
